¹ An Administrative Accommodation provides a courtesy arrangement for applicants with certain health-related issues in standard test rooms following the standard testing schedule. In contrast, a Nonstandard Testing Accommodation (NTA) is an entirely separate form of accommodation provided to applicants with disabilities under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) who have health-related conditions such as physical impairments, learning disorders, visual and hearing impairments, and psychiatric and psychological disorders. A NTA accommodation may deviate from the standard testing schedule. NTA requests are reviewed by an outside consultant forms, have stricter deadlines, and require specific documentation.
